Vendor Tips

How to choose, book, and communicate with your vendors, so everyone is on the same page well befor your wedding day

Ask every vendor for their day-of arrival AND departure/pickup time

Why? Knowing when a vendor is leaving (and what they are taking with them) prevents confusion for our team managing the day

When booking your caterer, ask about staff-to-guest ratio

Why? A lower ratio doesn't mean faster service. It usually means a smoother night overall, from bar lines to plate clearing

Book your photography and videographer together when possible

Why? Many teams offer bundle pricing, and having worked together before means smoother, less intrusive coverage on your actual day

Give your florist your final numbers as early as possible

Why? Flowers are seasonal and sources in advance. Last-minute changes to your counts can mean substitutions you didn't plan for

Confirm who's responsible for taking home leftover food, cake, and decor

Why? This gets overlooked constantly. Decide ahead of time (and let them know!) so no one's scrambling at the end of a long day

Provide your DJ/band with a "do not play" list, not just a "must play" list

Why? Requests are easy. But knowing what to avoid is just as important for keeping the dance floor full all night

Ask vendors directly about our driveway and hills

Why? Hocking Hills is beautiful, but the incline can catch delivery vehicles off guard. Flagging this to your vendors in advance prevents damage to delicate items

Insider Tips

Building a Good Timeline

- Build in more buffer time than feels necessary. It's the single most common piece of advice from couples looking back on their own day.
- Assign someone (your coordinator, a parent, a close friend) to help keep you moving during cocktail hour and reception rounds, so you actually get to eat and enjoy your own party.
- Confirm backup plans with key vendors, not just their availability. Life happens, and a vendor with a plan B is worth more than one who's just "pretty sure" they'll be there.

Building a Good Seating Chart

- Loop in both sets of parents before finalizing your chart. They'll often catch a conflict or connection you didn't know about.
- Set your plus-one policy early and apply it the same way to everyone. Consistency heads off most hurt feelings before they start.

Alcohol Guide: How Much to Buy

- Plan for about 1 drink per guest, per hour of service. This is the standard formula most bartenders and planners use.
- It's normal to buy slightly more than the formula suggests. Couples consistently say they'd rather have a little extra left over than run short.
- For a wedding of about 150 guests, real spend data puts total alcohol costs in the $2,250 to $6,750 range, depending on bar style and selection.

Spotting Scammer Vendors

- A real vendor will always meet with you, whether in person or on a video call, and provide a written contract before taking payment.
- Traceable payment methods (credit card, check, verified invoice) are standard. Be cautious of anyone who only accepts wire transfers or gift cards.
- If you're ever unsure about a vendor, ask us. We're always happy to share what we know.

Where to DIY (and Where Not To)

- Great DIY candidates: signage, favors, and non-perishable desserts. All can be made well ahead of time with no day-of pressure.
- If you DIY decor, box and label everything in advance, and give your setup person a clear written list. It makes their job easy and stress-free.
- Consider leaving photography, florals, and bartending to the professionals. These are the areas where experience and equipment make the biggest visible difference.

More Insider Tips

Where to DIY (and Where Not To)

- Great DIY candidates: signage, favors, and non-perishable desserts. All can be made well ahead of time with no day-of pressure.
- If you DIY decor, box and label everything in advance, and give your setup person a clear written list. It makes their job easy and stress-free.
- Consider leaving photography, florals, and bartending to the professionals. These are the areas where experience and equipment make the biggest visible difference.

Calming Pre-Wedding Nerves

- Take a quiet minute alone (or with your partner) before you walk down the aisle. Many couples say it's what made the day feel real.
- Block off your calendar in the final few days. Give yourself permission to rest instead of squeezing in last-minute tasks.
- Trust the plan you've already built, and the team executing it. Handing off the details is what lets you actually be present.

Choosing Your Wedding Party Without Drama

- Choose people based on your relationship with them now, not obligation or history. It keeps the group close-knit and low-stress.
- Uneven numbers, or no wedding party at all, is completely normal and increasingly common.
- Have any harder conversations early and directly. It's easier on everyone than letting tension build.

Budget: Splurge vs. Save

- Photography and videography are the splurges couples say they never regret. These are the memories you keep forever.
- If your budget is tighter, prioritize food, drinks, and photography first. These are what guests experience most directly.
- Save on paper goods, favors, and extras guests rarely remember a year later. Put that budget toward what actually gets replayed and looked back on.

Post-Wedding To-Dos

- Get your dress preserved within a few weeks. Stains like champagne or cake are much easier to treat early.
- Aim to send thank you notes within 2-3 months. It's a much lighter task in smaller batches than all at once.
- Handle your name change in order: Social Security card first, then everything else follows more smoothly from there.
